Q: Is it secure to publish a digital certificate? Is it (safe) to publish a certificate for a friend? Will he be able to access a server through that certificate? I'd like to know what I'd have to do so he can still access the server on our computer. A: If you just gave your friend a private key, then no. That's why public key certificates are used. (See also this question.) But there are plenty of reasons that a certificate might be used in addition to the key pair. A lot of certificates contain some limited information about the key pair (e.g. revocation lists). But not all certificates are used just to ensure that a private key is under your control. Most public-key cryptography uses asymmetric encryption which means that you, the recipient, must be able to verify a signature. To verify the authenticity of a certificate you may be asked to verify
